Prolog: The beginning

Prologue: The beginning

A long time ago people of the planet Kalnab gazed into the night sky after telling ancient tales of how their ancestors came here from a blue planet called Earth, which was destroyed in a cataclysm.

The survivors fled from this using the compact star cruisers that the scientist had recently introduced.

They traveled from one star to the next, following the dream vision of a young girl like being.

She was dressed in gold from her head to her toes. A gold star glistened on her forehead as she told the travelers of a distant planet which she had created.

The planet resembled their long gone earth from its oceans to the continents when they landed the girl told them that the planet's name was Kalnab.

The glowing immortal, stated that her name was Goddess Fatima.

The creatures on this planet said she was the goddess of creation.

It was from her that all living things came.

Many millennia passed this became a legend.

What remains of their home planet is nothing more than a few medical records and ancient relics.

Present day Kalnab is much different from how the survivors of the Great Cataclysm found it. Now there are many buildings and several different races of people.

They have lost the knowledge of firepower and technology that caused the downfall of their ancestors' home world.

Though the children of Fatima lived in peace for many millennia with out discord or chaos they all knew it would not last forever.
